A NATIONAL RELIGION.

From the Capital-Commonwealth.

A portion of our religious people have lately been agitating for an amendment to the constitution of the United States recognizing the existence of a supreme being, the creator of the universe and the ruler of nations. In the same line, though differently expressed, is the proposed amendment offered sometime ago by Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, which is printed herewith:

ARTICLE.

Section 1. No state shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Section 2. Each state in this union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and sixteen years, inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion. But no money shall be expended for religious instruction, or for any other purpose or credit belonging to any religious organization, or to any state, or to the United States, shall ever be appropriated, applied or given to the use or purpose of any school, institution, corporation or person, whereby instruction or training shall be given in the doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonial, or observances peculiar to any sect, denomination, organization, or society being, or claiming to be, religious in its character; nor shall such peculiar doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonial, or observances, be taught or inculcated in the free public schools.

Section 3. To the end that each state, the United States, and all the people thereof, may have and preserve governments republican in form and in substance, the United States shall guarantee to every state, and to the United States, the support and maintenance of such a system of free public schools as is herein provided.

Section 4. That congress shall enforce this article by legislation when necessary.

Without considering the first question which a lawyer would ask about the construction of these four sections—how it would be possible to prevent the establishment of a religion and at the same time require the establishment and maintenance of a system of common schools in which a religion shall be taught—the great question of the people is—shall we have a national religion?

It will, probably, be agreed that teaching the principles of the Christian religion in the public schools could be done without interfering with the teaching of religion by denominations in the churches, but common observation is directly to the contrary. What are the principles of the christian religion, and where will we go to find them laid down so plainly as to be understood? Is it not a fact that non-professors are better agreed than are professors as to what these principles are? And if that be true, shall the non-professors be the teachers? If not, where shall we go to find them, and could they agree among themselves? Briefly, would it be possible to secure unanimity in this matter? And if not, would it be wise to establish a rule of conscience which any portion of the people do not subscribe to?

It is true that definitions of the principles of the christian religion as given by any well meaning person could be adopted and practiced without injury to personal morals; but that is not the issue. Has one man the right to dictate to another man his religion? And if not, have the majority a right to prescribe a national religion? If it be said that christian doctrine is only a high order of morality, then why not use the words "principles of morality instead of 'principles of the christian religion'?" And if that language should be adopted, would it not be well to define these words so that these people would know just what is meant and so that there should be no latitude allowed teachers?

It will not do. Religion is sacred to its professors; but let them enjoy what they desire in this matter, and employ teachers of good character in the public schools; then public morality will not suffer, and the people will take care of the principles of the christian religion. There must not be a national religion in this country.

W. A. Shumaker, postmaster at Carbon Hill, Ala., drank heavily Nov. 9, and in a frenzy attacked his seventeen year old wife with a knife. He then attempted to pour kerosene on her clothes and set fire to them. In self-defense she drew a pistol and shot him through the heart. They were but recently married.
